The following is a quotation of the second paragraph of 35 U.S.C. 112:

The specification shall conclude with one or more claims particularly pointing out and distinctly claiming the subject matter which the applicant regards as his invention.

Claim 7 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 112, second paragraph, as being indefinite for failing to particularly point out and distinctly claim the subject matter which applicant regards as the invention.

Claim 7 recites a change from lyophilic to lyophobic twice. This is redundant and therefore indefinite.

The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless –

(e) the invention was described in (1) an application for patent, published under section 122(b), by another filed in the United States before the invention by the applicant for patent or (2) a patent granted on an application for patent by another filed in the United States before the invention by the applicant for patent, except that an international application filed under the treaty defined in section 351(a) shall have the effects for purposes of this subsection of an application filed in the United States only if the international application designated the United States and was published under Article 21(2) of such treaty in the English language.

Claims 1, 3, 5, 6, 8, 12-14, and 16-20 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(e) as being anticipated by Akers, JR. et al.

Akers, JR. et al disclose polymer encapsulated pigment suitable for use as ink in ink jet printers (abstract). These pigments are taught as prepared by dissolving block copolymers in solvent, introducing a pigment and driving off solvent (paragraphs 18-20). The step of driving off solvent is seen as meeting applicants' limitation to a change in concentration stimulus. Agglomeration is seen as inherently resulting when a solvent is removed from a solution or slurry.

Regarding instant claims 14 and 16, a typical ink jet printing process is seen as occurring by agglomeration of ink solids upon evaporation (change of concentration) of the dispersing medium.

Regarding instant claims 17-19, no limitations on the apparatus are seen which distinguish it from typical printers known to the art and referred to by the reference.

Claims 1-17 and 20 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(e) as being anticipated by Berge et al.

Berge et al disclose micellar compositions comprising block copolymers encapsulating pigments (abstract). The block copolymers taught as suitable include those comprising vinyl ether monomers and those having oxyalkylene side chains (column 8, lines 41-65) and polydispersities meeting applicants' limitation (column 14, lines 30-36). These compositions are taught as suitable for producing inks (column 18, line 17).

The micellar compositions are taught as prepared from solutions of the block copolymers with added colorant (see examples).

The micelles of these compositions are taught as encapsulating dyes and pigments. This encapsulation process is seen as equivalent to applicants' claimed agglomeration.

The recitation of the use of these compositions as inks is seen as inherently teaching an imaging process through which agglomeration of micelles occurs upon drying of the ink.

Claim 21 is objected to as being dependent upon a rejected base claim, but would be allowable if rewritten in independent form including all of the limitations of the base claim and any intervening claims.
